FIFTEENTH ANNUAL REPORT.

A COMPANY of twenty-four girls, varying in age from eight to eighteen years, gathered on Christmas-day at the Industrial Home, around tables spread with little gifts for them, and sang their Christmas carol with glad voices and happy hearts. It was a pleasant sight—that family of girls, enjoying the modest festivity which friends of the institution had provided for their gratification. Some of those girls had not been used to many scenes of this kind in their brief, sad lives, and to none had the good things of this life been very plentifully given. But they knew on this day, if they never did before, that they had friends, who not only cared that they should be taught and trained to usefulness, but who would also take trouble and pains to give them an hour's pleasure.

And the Managers of the Home, who looked on well pleased at their enjoyment that day—did they see nothing beyond the passing happiness their gifts and presence there had given to those girls? Ah, they beheld far more than this, as they looked from face to face in the group, and thought of the past and the present of each girl. They saw behind the smiling faces there, homelessness, neglect, temptation, danger; realization—on the part of Sunday-school teacher, or perhaps some relative, helpless to shield, but still awake to the peril—of the terrible risk of unprotected girlhood; and then they saw with joy, Christian love and womanly care thrown around these “women-children,” as a wall of safety and defence, which they must climb of their own will in order to get beyond its shelter.

Was not this scene, when thus viewed, one well befitting the day on which we celebrate the coming of the Christ into our world to save it? And does it require any great stretch of imagination to picture that same Christ, who took the little girl, twelve years of age, by the hand, and lifted her from her sick bed, caring tenderly for each of these poor girls, and seeking to win them to himself? No; it is Christ-like work that is done, in bringing these girls into an atmosphere of Christian love and care, and the more faithfully and earnestly it is done, the more like our Master's own work does it become. And his enduring word concerning such service stands sure. Ye "shall in no wise lose" your "reward." It may not come immediately; it may need faith and patience long-continued; but it will come.

In the last Annual Report, a statement was made regarding alterations and additions made to the house, the reasons why these had become necessary, and the expense attending them. The amount of the latter proved to be even greater than was there stated; but every cent of it has been paid by special donations for that purpose. This result was not brought about without much effort and some self-denial on the part of the Managers; for which, however, their success has fully repaid them.

During the first three or four months of 1872, there was much sickness in the Home—not the epidemic then prevailing in the city, from which this Home was mercifully spared, but a diphtheritic sore throat—and by the advice of the physician in attendance, no new girls were received, nor any placed out, until the disease had entirely disappeared. Very few have been sent to service during the year, partly in consequence of the above fact, and partly because the Managers decided, in the fall, to keep the girls in the Home longer than had been the custom heretofore, in order to give them more thorough training in work, and a better common education; finding, as they did, that there was usually very little done even to enable them to keep what they had been taught, after they went to places. This decision caused disappointment to many applicants for girls, some of whom could not quite understand that the good of the girls was, in the minds of the Managers, paramount to the supply of the pressing necessities of those wanting them as servants.

These girls are educated and fitted for service, not for ambitious effort to rise above their station in life; but they will be better servants, in the judgment of the Managers, for having their minds awakened to know something of the world in which they live, and their relations to it. No superficial smattering of many branches, useless to them in after life, is given in the school at the Home; but the aim is to instruct them thoroughly in a few elementary studies, which will have more or less practical bearing on their future lives.

Eighteen new girls have been admitted during the year, and six have returned to friends or gone to places; twenty-seven remaining now in the Home. More than three hundred and fifty have, in the fifteen years that this institution has existed, been cared for within its walls; and many of them have done well after leaving it—as large a proportion, probably, as can generally be found to reward any efforts made to elevate and educate neglected youth.

The hearty thanks of the Managers are due to the kind friends who have aided them by subscriptions or donations, in money, provisions, clothing, or contributions of any kind. Often these gifts have had far more worth than their apparent value, for they have spoken, to somewhat weary and discouraged workers, of sympathy and co-operation from those not directly connected with the work; thereby cheering their hearts and strengthening their hands.

An entertainment was given, in the summer, at a country boarding-house near the city, for the benefit of the Home, and $124 was realized therefrom. Also, a concert was kindly given by several amateur and professional performers in the city, in December, from which $237 was received into the treasury of the Home.

The Managers regret that such expedients should be necessary in order to sustain the institution; but as long as they are needful, they are thankful that so many kind friends are at hand to plan and prosecute them to so successful a result.

In order to show the economy with which the affairs of the Home are managed, we append the following statement, calling attention also to the fact that no clothing, except shoes, has been purchased during the year, everything having been given by friends:
